ALL ABOUT HANJI

What Is Hanji?

Hanji is a traditional Korean paper

handmade from Paper mulberry using traditional methods.

Hanji is hand-processed from one year old Paper mulberry and is complete only after the 100th touch.

In this regard, Hanji was also called the

'hundredth paper'.

As Hanji has a soft yet strong glossy texture, it was compared to silk and it was laid at the King's feet as valuable goods.

Hanji is an acid-free paper made out of long fibers,

and it is well preserved.

MuguJeong-gwangDaedalanigyeong,

the world's oldest woodblock printing still exists

because of the continual reverence for hanji.

Strengths Of Hanji

How To Make Hanji

Collecting and steaming Paper mulberry

One year old Paper mulberry that are cut between November and February are used for the paper's material.

Steam the trees, and peel the bark until black bark comes out. If so, peel the bark again in order to collect white bark.

Boiling bark of Paper mulberry in lye

Make lye out of ashes made from burned wheat stems, bean steams, and straws. Soak the white bark sufficiently in water and cut in pieces of around 30~40cm in size and steam them in a cauldron for around 4 to 5 hours.

Cleansing and bleaching

Soak the steamed fibers of Paper mulberry in running water to wash away the lye and place them for 5 to 7 days under sunlight for natural bleaching. Take the fibers of Paper mulberry out of the water in order to remove blemish.

Unfolding fibers and dissolving glue of Paper mulberry

Place the fibers of trees on a rock called Dakdol and pound them with a bat called 'Dak Bat'. Put the ingredients into a paper container and resolve them. Put in some Paper mulberry glue called 'Hwangchokgyu' and stir to ensure that the fibers and the glue maintain a consistent density.

Scooping up Hanji

Scoop up with a deckle into the paper container where the ingredients and the glue are well-mixed and shake it thoroughly.

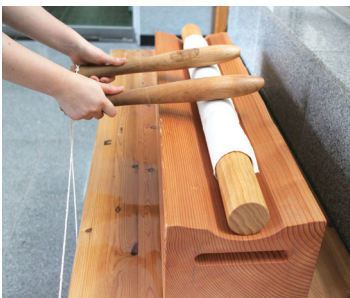

Piling up wet papers and squeezing water

Pile up wet papers sheet by sheet on a board. Place pillows(rush, nylon thread) in between and ensure it can be easily removed later. When around 400~500 wet papers are piled up, put a board on top of them, and place a stone on it or a leverage to squeeze out the water overnight.

Drying

Take the paper one by one and dry them individually. In the past, they were dried on a floor, clay wall, or on a wood board. But recently they are dried on an iron plate.

Smoothing

This is a traditional technique to smooth the surface of Hanji. Dozens of Hanjis are piled up and pounded by a machine called Dochimgi. This machine's shape resembles a treadmill. Smoothed papers have an even surface and the cracks between fibers are filled, which prevents ink bleeding and the surface to be glossy.
